Welcome to Oregon Community Colleges Distance Learning

For more than two decades Oregon community colleges have worked together using technology to expand access to education for Oregonians.

Today courses are delivered using a variety of distance learning technologies and software including online, interactive television, cable television, videotape, and CDs. Courses may combine technologies to enhance students' learning experiences.

Students may obtain their Associate of Arts Oregon Transfer (AAOT) degree by distance education. Other degrees and certificates are available also. For specific information, go to oregoncollegesonline.com.

Oregon community colleges are on the quarter system and are accredited through the Northwest Association of Schools and Colleges and Universities.

Before enrolling, check with the advising/counseling department of the community college of your choice for specific degree requirements, required placement testing, and course prerequisites.

Distance education classes are academically equivalent to on-campus classes. Most distance education classes are guided study; that is, they begin when the term begins, end when the term ends, and have due dates for assignments and exams. Some distance education classes require site-based lab activities and proctored exams.

Listings and information about distance education courses are available on the Oregon Community Colleges Distance Learning web site at oregoncollegesonline.com. For additional information on individual courses, please contact the college offering that course or your local community college for information on how to enroll.

Frequently Asked Questions

Who should take distance learning courses?

Distance learning courses are designed for students who prefer the flexibility of participating in classes that are not time or location specific.

Students participating in distance education classes should be self-disciplined, highly motivated, independent learners who are willing to take on new challenges.

How do I get started?

You must apply for admission to the community college of your choice. The college you choose to "attend" does not have to be the college within your local area. You may apply at any community college within the state. Contact the Admissions Office at the college of your choice or check out admissions requirements on the college's web site.

In most cases you will need to complete an admission form and submit it to the college where you will be registering for classes. If you want to enroll in a course not offered by your local community college, please contact the college offering the course for information and registration instructions.

How do I register for classes?

Methods of registration vary from college to college so be sure to check with the college where you have applied or the college that is offering the course in which you are interested. This information is usually available on the college Web site. All tuition and fees are assessed at registration.

What does it cost to take these courses?

Tuition and fees vary by college. Check college web sites for current tuition rates and fees as well as individual course listings. Additional distance learning fees may apply.

How do I purchase textbooks and supplies?

Most distance education courses require textbooks. Usually books and supplies can be ordered from college bookstores either online or by telephone using a major credit card. Call the college bookstore where you are registering for classes or check their Web site for information.

What services are available to me?

Student services are available to distance education students. It is advisable to work with an academic adviser from the college where you plan to earn your degree or certificate to ensure that the classes for which you register will apply to your program of study. If you haven't decided what area of study is right for you, counseling and advising staff are available to assist you in making a decision. Financial aid and veterans' benefits are available to distance education students. Check with the financial aid office or veterans' office at the college where you apply for admission to find out what options are available to you. Oregon Community Colleges offer support services for students with documented disabilities. If you require additional services, contact your local college to initiate the process.

Can I earn a degree or a certificate at a distance?

Information on degrees and certificates is available on the Oregon Community Colleges distance learning web site at: oregoncollegesonline.com.

Course requirements for degrees vary from college to college, so be sure to check with the college through which you plan to get your degree for specific requirements. This information is usually available on each college's web site.

How do I begin a distance learning course?

After you have registered for a distance learning course, you will receive a syllabus, or instructions on how to access the syllabus, for your course. You must have a syllabus before you begin a course. The syllabus provides all the information necessary for successful completion of the course including course requirements, objectives and outcomes, and grading policy.

What's the difference between a provider college and a host college?

The provider college is responsible for "providing" the instructor and course content. The host college makes a provider course available to their enrolled students. All students participate together in the same class regardless of whether they enroll with the provider college or through a host college.

For example, when you look through the brochure under Accounting Courses, you may see an Accounting course listed with Chemeketa as the Provider college and Oregon Coast, Clatsop, and Southwestern Oregon colleges listed as Host colleges. This means that you can register for the course through the provider college or any one of the host colleges. If there are no host colleges listed for a course, then you must register with the provider college.

Definitions

Distance Learning or Distance Education Courses

These are courses that employ technology to bring educational opportunities to students who are separated by time and/or location from the instructor. Modes of instruction include telecourses, online courses, videotaped courses and televised live interactive courses. Individual courses may employ more than one technology to enhance the learning experience. In most cases, all distance education classes require the purchase of textbooks and may require the purchase of course-related materials as well.

Telecourses

Telecourses are coordinated learning systems based on a series of pre-recorded video lectures that are often available on local cable channels or on videotape or DVD at designated campus and library sites. Some colleges check out telecourse videotapes or DVDs to enrolled students or students have the option of renting a video series from a national rental service. Telecourses are taught by a college instructor and are supplemented by print materials that may include a textbook and a study guide.

Online Courses

Students participating in online courses must have access to a computer with Internet connectivity to obtain course materials, submit assignments, take exams, and interact with their instructor and classmates.

Videotaped Courses

On-campus lectures are videotaped and sent to outlying campuses where the tapes are made available to registered students. In some cases, tapes may be mailed directly to the students for viewing.

Televised Live Interactive Courses

Live, on-campus course lectures are delivered via television to outlying college campuses or other designated locations. These systems employ either one-way video and two-way audio or, in some cases two-way video, two-way audio as a means of student interaction.

Oregon Transfer Module

The Oregon Transfer Module comprises one year of coursework exclusively in general education, which can lead either to an AAOT or to a baccalaureate degree from any public Oregon college or university in the Oregon University System and will result in sophomore standing. Students who earn the module, which is equivalent to three academic quarters or 45 credits, must select from a list of approved courses. You must earn a grade of "C-" or better in all courses and have a minimum cumulative GPA of 2.00 to complete the module. Upon transfer, the receiving institution may specify additional general education coursework that is required for a major or to make up the difference between the transfer module and the institution's total general education requirements. If you intend to transfer to a specific Oregon university, contact an advisor who will work with you to ensure that you meet the specific requirements at the receiving school.
